"Superbosses" hail from every industry and follow no patterns, best practices or rules other than their own. They measure success as much by how many superstars they create as by financial achievements, awards and fame. Their impact doesn't stop with the leaders and future titans they develop for their own teams and organizations.

They described driven, enigmatic, tireless "superbosses." These leaders seed entire industries with the talent people they nurture. Finkelstein argues that a small number of bosses produce the great majority of the best talent â€“ a sort of 80/20 rule. Refreshingly, he doesn't portray superbosses as admirable in every respect.
